The broad topics that will be covered in this course would include: the climate crisis, environmental and economic justice, Indigenous rights, and environmental conservation and sustainability. Simply stated, "ecology" is the science of connection. In this interdisciplinary and intersectional seminar course, we will explore varieties of connections that can be made across the environmental, cultural, social, economic and the political spaces and, across various modes of human inquiries, including arts, humanities, religion and sciences. The aim is to integrate knowledge and practices across disciplines, cultures and geographies—to apprehend, through reading, discussions, research and/or creative productions—the myriad social-environmental crises of our time, including the climate breakdown and the Sixth Extinction. Particular emphasis will be given to geographies going through rapid environmental changes, and how communities in those places, often in partnership with national and international institutions, are responding through a combination of resistance, resilience and revitalization initiatives. We will also discuss how recent scholarship in environmental humanities and ecologically oriented art criticism and history, in part informed by indigenous cosmologies and cosmopolitics and environmentalism of the poor, are challenging and changing the Anthropocene narrative and guiding the discussions toward a more just and sustainable Earth for all living beings. We will also discuss the two conferences convened by the instructor: Decolonizing Nature: resistance | resilience | revitalization in 2017 (http://decolonizingnature.unm.edu) and, the last oil: a multispecies justice symposium on Arctic Alaska and beyond in 2018 (https://thelastoil.unm.edu). Offered with ARTS 529.004, FA 395 Topics in Arts & Community. In this course, we will explore modes of writing that cross and bend the boundaries between personal memoir, short essay, theory, poetry, visual art, and criticism. Authors we will discuss include Claudia Rankine, Paul Chan, Carmen Machado, Durga Chew-Bose, Maggie Nelson, Anne Carson, Saidiya Hartman, Fred Moten and Stefano Harney, Layli Long Soldier, Lydia Davis, Eileen Myles, Leah Lakshmi Piepzna-Samarasinha, LTTR, and others. Moving from the premise that the personal is political, our conversations will delve into the ways in which experimental forms within language and art can enact spaces of liberation and resistance. Students will workshop and develop written/visual works throughout the semester. This course is open to students from all disciplines.
